

(22,500 ft.), Sorata (24,000 ft. almost to the summit), Aconcagua (23,000 ft.). . . Maquignaz proved himself to be an excellent guide in a country new to him, and a good traveller. He kept his temper under adversity, adapted himself to unwonted situations, lived contentedly on poor food, and was only sorry for himself when there was no work for him to do. He maintained well the good character he bears. He made many friends and no enemies amongst the people we met. As a guide he is first rate, and I have no doubt that his future will bring him fame and prosperity as one of the best guides in the Alps.'

(Signed) MARTIN CONWAY,
February 12, 1899.

He was one of the best men in a valley which has produced great mountaineers, and he worthily upheld the family name.
